

Waldron

History: Waldron is an English name, and the family originated in England (there is a town of Waldron in East Sussex). The family had been notable in England since the time of William the Conqueror's takeover from Normandy in 1066. However, this branch emigrated from England to Holland in the 1500s, and had married Dutch spouses for nearly a century. Resolved Waldron, son of Resolved of Amsterdam, Holland, emigrated from Holland in the mid-1600s and settled Nieuw Amsterdam with Pieter Stuyvesant.

14. Resolved WALDRON of Amsterdam, Holland. Apparently m. Maria GOVERTS, but unknown if she is the mother of the following children:

- a. Resolved WALDRON (10 May 1610* in Amsterdam, Holland - 1690) (Source #6 says 1616.)
- b. Joseph WALDRON (? in Amsterdam - ?) m. (1) Aeltie Hendricks KOCH, (2) Annetie DANIELS.

13. Resolved WALDRON (10 May 1610 or 1616? in Amsterdam, Holland- 17 May 1690) m. (1) Rebecca HENDRICKS (daughter of Hendrick KOCH a respected Amsterdam burgher; a burgher was a city-dweller of note -- a burg was a city or town) in 1647?; m. (2) 1653 Tanneke NAGEL (1624 in Holland - 1690 prob. New Haarlem).
About his life in Holland, from another source:

Resolved, the son of Resolved WALDRON of Amsterdam, became a book printer. The family was English . . . and the name had spread through nearly all southern counties, but Resolved and his brother Joseph, being born and raised in Holland, had acquired the characteristics of Hollanders and had married sisters of Dutch citizens. After marrying Tanneke NAGEL, he lived in Amsterdam on the Teerketelsateeg, a short street just north of the dam, but in the same year he sailed with his family for America, where his brother had preceded him by two years.

From Rikers' History of Harlem (Source #1): He was thoroughly Dutch in character and sympathies and in his conduct in New York with regard to the change of government. In Amsterdam he had followed the trade of a printer of books. He has been called "Baron" WALDRON, but this is incorrect. It is said that he made a journey to Brazil before coming to New York.

(Genealogy of Frederick WALDRON states that Resolved came to New York [then New Amsterdam] in 1647.)

He emigrated with his family to New Netherland late in 1654; his brother Joseph, also a printer in Amsterdam, had preceded him. The families were received into the membership of the Dutch church at Nieuw Amsterdam, and the next year the brothers bought a house and lot on Broadway, near Wall Street. Resolved WALDRON was made overseer of the workmen.

In 1657 he was admitted a burgher. His conscientious exactness in performing his duties made him a favorite with Governor Stuyvesant. He was speedily promoted deputy to the attorney general, and soon after deputy sheriff. On public errands he visited every part of the province and the neighboring colonies, and in 1659 was sent to Maryland with another to indicate the Dutch title on the Delaware River, in which mission they were successful. The next year the directors in Holland would have made him sheriff of the Dutch towns on Long Island, but Governor Stuyvesant wrote that he could not well spare him, also that he was ill-suited for their office, as he could not well wield his pen. Stuyvesant was allowed to retain him while his own rule lasted.

When the English took over, Resolved WALDRON took the oath of allegiance, but retired to private life in Harlem, disappointed in his sympathies and interests. Nevertheless, his law-abiding and orderly disposition could not tolerate the disorderly proceedings on the part of the Dutch population, and we soon find him holding office under the English, acting still as an upright and useful citizen. He was made constable at Harlem when that settlement was brought under the jurisdiction of the city of New York, and he was in public office for most of the remainder of his life. He was one of the five patentees of Harlem under the English government. In 1669 he was one of the commissioners for laying out a wagon road between New York and Harlem. He was an elder of the church, and in 1686 he placed the first stone of the New Church in Harlem.
